

Dearest Maggie - I am feeling much better today! after my visit with you. You make me realize more than ever before that you love me - and love me a great deal. You were so ravishingly sweet and Covallie, darling - and loving you as I do you can understand my overwhelming desire for you.
You know I am afraid to force myself to let down, forget you or take you for granted - not revel in my love for you. I am afraid of losing something - I don't know or understand what, but I have that feeling.
I can't stand to dream of the future and how wonderful it will be - just we two - in our own little world. I don't dare think of things like that!

Pud and Blanche were here to dinner last night.
Father started the explosion before dinner, about my trips. Pud sat down on him - said if they kept up their opposition we would get married sure.
Mother remarked that she hated for me to spend the money when I don't have it - makes it hard on her. Mother seldom complains but she's right. I must live on my 25 per-

Pud assured them that if they opposed us and we got married we always had a place at 5616 to stay as long as we pleased -

Not a word was said in criticism this morning about my trip.

Sure as fate - of course - Uncle and Aunt Hois blew in last night. When told where I was Uncle just sort of laughed. They are afraid of Mother when it comes to criticizing me. I don't mind - it's just as well for him to know how much I am your adoring and pursuing slave.

Uncle, Pud and I are working at the office tonight. Tom Nott is going to take one of Uncle's rooms - and we are going to move out tonight.

I love you and love you, dear!
Rec'd your dear, sweet, sad letter this morning and was gladder than ever I had been down there and with you a few hours. I hope those hours strengthened you as they did me.

Always, dearest little wife,

I am your adoring

husband, Freddy
